

Nowadays the way many people interact with each other has changed because of technology.

In what way has technology affected the types of relationships people make?
Has this become a positive or negative development?

Technological advancements have greatly impacted the way people live and interact with one another, and the major contribution to this is the ease in communication. Now people can inform others about their achievements by posting events on platforms where information is shared among many. This makes participation from all types of people, regardless of where they are and what they look like, which makes this a very positive development as it enables transparency and equality.

[75]

Prior to the era of Internet, transfer of message was time consuming, and usually due to uncertain factors there was a tendency of delay in reply. The internet and the underlying applications enabled peer-to-peer communication, which allowed both one-on-one and group conversations by using different modes of transmissions such as text, voice, video and so on. This has allowed people to communicate on purpose and, business meetings, remote jobs and online educational programs are great examples of this. Furthermore, relationships have become stronger than ever, where families are one message away from each other regardless of being on purpose in any part of the world.

[105]

Earlier people were living in congested environment, with limited opportunities, but technological impacts have transformed world into a global village. People can now communicate and avail from one another in many ways regardless of their origin, color and ethnicity. This is the greatest development in the history of mankind and its evolving to further regions, making humans most civilized than ever. Moreover, this trend is producing ability to accept others and unite against factors which are against the humanity, most recent is combating corona virus through distant interactions in collaborations of doctors and pharmaceutical scientists.

[95]

In conclusion, modes of communications among people have increased large numbers since the advent of internet, therefore people have become closer than ever which allows them to help at larger scale.

[31]